ABSTRACT

The teacher's role in getting used to singing the national anthem is based on three problems, namely the low sense of solemnity of students when singing the national anthem, the lack of enthusiasm for students to sing the national anthem, and the decline in students' sense of nationalism in the school environment. The approach taken in this research is a qualitative approach with a descriptive method of the teacher's role. Data collection is done through observation, interview and documentation techniques. The results of the study revealed that the teacher played a role in getting used to singing the national song which made students interested in the national song and the teacher's efforts to provide nationalism education through the national song. It can be concluded that the teacher's role in getting used to singing the national anthem is well done. The teacher's role is conveyed in familiarizing students with singing the national anthem before studying.
